

We want an internet that is... Safe, fun, informative, interesting, happy, kind to everyone

The government can help achieve this by...

Vetting people that use the internet.
Putting laws in place that stops people from talking to anyone under 18.

The government can show they're listening to children and young people by....

Using Newsround to show the new laws. Making gaming safer and keeping children safe.

Teachers and professionals working with young people can help achieve this by...

Giving us safe equipment to use in school (laptops/tablets). Teaching us about being safe online.

Teachers and professionals can show they're listening to children and young people by....

Having regular lessons about being safe online and giving us time to discuss our online problems.

The internet industry can help achieve this by...

Putting strict rules and checks in place when people go onto games or websites.

The internet industry can show they're listening to children and young people by....

Making the rules clear and taking action against people who don't obey them.

Parents and carers can help achieve this by...

Limiting screen time at home and using privacy settings to keep us safe. Not letting us use devices late at night.

Parents and carers can show they're listening to children and young people by....

Setting rules that we must follow when using the internet at home and talking to us about what they've done.

Children and young people can help achieve this by...

- Promising to be kind to our friends, online.
- Reporting unkind or unacceptable behaviour to the app and to a trusted adult.
- Calling out people who are misusing the internet - if they know who they are.
- Being aware of how to stay safe on social media and apps.
